Age Should Child Baby Teeth Fall Out

Most kids are excited to feel a tooth wiggle (and perhaps get a visit from the tooth fairy), while some worry about whether it will hurt when it falls out. If your child is a worrier, you can reassure him that he probably won't feel anything.

First in, first out

A child's 20 baby teeth, which typically come in by age 3, usually fall out in the order in which they came in.

That means the lower center teeth (lower center incisors) are usually the first to go, around age 5 or 6.

Out with the old

Encourage your child to gently wiggle a wobbler. Some loose teeth can actually be rotated because the root underneath has almost completely disintegrated.

But remind your child not to yank a tooth before it's ready to fall out on its own because it makes the broken root more vulnerable to infection.

In with the new

The new teeth may look bigger, especially those first few. That's because they are! Adult teeth also tend to be less white than baby teeth and have pronounced ridges because they haven't been used yet for biting and chewing.
